The man was probably in his 60s, tall, gray-haired and weathered looking, perusing the tables at a wellness fair where I was tending a booth for The Village Employee Assistance Program. He stopped to ask about chemical dependency services. After I told him about what we offer, he leaned in close and said to me, “We all could use a little help sometimes.”

Isn’t that the truth? It’s a powerful reminder, and one I hope you’ll share with your friends, family, and colleagues.

In my role with The Village, I lead benefit overview sessions and visit with all different types of organizations and people to increase awareness about Village EAP resources. During these sessions, I also ask for help in normalizing access to counseling. Time and again, employees have shared with me how they or their household members have benefited from accessing counseling services through their EAP. Could you share with a friend or coworker about how you or someone you care for has benefited from having an outside ear?

Everyone, continued on back

“How The Village Employee Assistance Program Benefit Can Help You

Unsure Whether EAP Can Help You?

Read what employees like you have said about their experience:

“(My counselor) was very comforting and made it easy for me to start the therapy process. I was nervous and I’m very thankful for her kindness and gentle way of working through the session.”

“It was easy to access and set up an appointment with the program.”

“You can get the help you need without worrying about it financially.”

“I felt as though I could easily say anything without fear of judgment.”

“My family pays a lot for my daughter’s therapy, and this allows me to have therapy without a huge cost. I wouldn’t be able to afford my own therapy right now without EAP.”
The truth is everyone can benefit from counseling. No matter your age, gender, relationship status, socioeconomic status, spiritual beliefs (or lack thereof), or role within your organization, counseling can help. It’s beneficial even when you’re not sure what your exact issue or concern is. (Did you know an EAP counselor can be an accountability partner in focusing on your wellness or work goals?!)

On any given day, each of us is making difficult decisions, supporting others in their journeys, facing medical concerns, dealing with grief and loss, advocating for loved ones, or feeling the stress of attempting to prioritize what is most important in our home and work lives. As my new friend said, we all could use a little help sometimes.

Anyone can benefit from meeting with someone outside their circle who has a fresh perspective. Whether you are thinking about applying for a different role in the organization, need help navigating a change in team dynamics, are having a hard time managing your child’s behavior or caring for an elderly parent, or want to add healthy habits back into your daily life, The Village EAP is here for you!
